Acknowledgements and Contributors

The authors and project team at SAIIA would like to gratefully acknowledge the support and ongoing engagement of the Deutsche Gesellschaft für Internationale Zusammenarbeit (GIZ) ProSPECT team based in Gaborone, Botswana. The introductory chapter The Current Status of the Business-Enabling Environment and the chapter titled, Current Status of Key Economic Indicators – Regional Economic Trends were produced by the GIZ ProSPECT team. In addition, the project team expresses sincere appreciation to Alexandra Begg for steering this volume through publication, as well as Riona Judge McCormack for posting this and online resources to the – <http://www.thetradebeat.com/regional-institutions/regional-business-barriers-unlocking-economic-potential-in-southern-africa>.

A special thank you to all the interview partners who were consulted during the process of writing the business case studies for this publication.

GIZ ProSPECT is a regional project funded by the German Ministry for Economic Cooperation and Development (BMZ). Its aim is to strengthen the economic and trade policy capacities and performance in SADC. The project, which is based in Gaborone, Botswana, works closely with the SADC Secretariat, individual SADC member states and the private sector.

Contributors

Mark Schoeman is a Konrad Adenauer Stiftung research scholar on the Economic Diplomacy Programme (SAIIA). Mark has provided pivotal research input to the project, contributing in particular to the Non-tariff Barriers (NTB) at Beit Bridge, NTB Monitoring Mechanism and the Walvis Bay and its Adjacent Corridors case studies. He co-wrote the case study on Access to Finance in Malawi with Michael Carr.

Michael Carr was a visiting researcher of the Economic Diplomacy Programme (SAIIA) between May and August 2014, while a scholar at the University of Jena, Germany. Michael co-wrote the case study, Alternative Energy in Mining, with Christopher Wood.

Christopher Wood is a researcher of the Economic Diplomacy Programme at SAIIA. His areas of research include trade, investment and finance specialising in African regional integration and global economic governance.

Wolfe Braude works with SAIIA on new business development, economic diplomacy research and stakeholder management. Wolfe is also a director at Emet Consulting, which he co-founded in 2002. He wrote the case study, Regulatory Constraints to the Development of a Fuel Ethanol Market in SADC.

Erica Penfold is a researcher and the project co-ordinator of Poverty Reduction and Regional Integration (SAIIA). Erica's particular focus areas are good governance and democracy, regionalism, Southern Africa's international relations, social policy, democratic reform and development. Erica has provided substantial intellectual input into the case study, Access to Medicines in Southern Africa.

Renée Hunter was a research intern of the Economic Diplomacy Programme (SAIIA) while studying at Honours College, University of Groningen. Renée provided substantial research input into the case study on Regional Transit Bonds.

Catherine Grant-Makokera is former programme head of Economic Diplomacy (SAIIA). Her areas of expertise include regional integration and government–private sector relations, for instance as secretary of the SADC Employers Group and SADC Business Forum from 2007 to 2010. Catherine has provided intellectual guidance to the project since its establishment in 2011 and has contributed particularly to the NTB Monitoring Mechanism case study.

Talitha Bertelsmann-Scott is a SAIIA research associate who has worked extensively in the areas of EU–South and Southern African trade relations, as well as Southern African integration. Talitha provided intellectual framing, guidance and management of the research team, providing amongst other things, inputs to the Access to Medicines in Southern Africa and writing the case study entitled SADC Univisa: Why the Lack of Progress?

Lesley Wentworth is programme manager of the Economic Diplomacy Programme (SAIIA). Her areas of research include foreign direct investment, public–private partnerships and regional economic development and integration. Lesley has contributed research support and direction to various case studies, including Regional Transit Bonds, Walvis Bay and its Adjacent Corridors and Access to Finance in Malawi.
